

Party Packet News

The year in review

1 December 2014, Edition 1

In the beginning...

Following her life-long dream, Nadine Thompson decided it's time to get those creative juices flowing and using her two kiddies as her inspiration, take the leap into the world of sugar, icing sugar, all types of sugar...

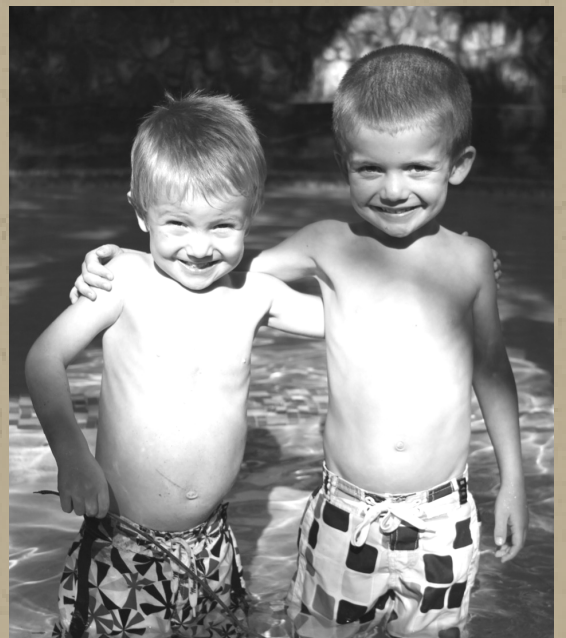

The Party Packet was born. Opening our doors in February 2014, we decided to give the Lowveld an experience never to be forgotten. From cakes to cupcakes, cake pops to cookies, party packets, invites, and many more, we've created beautiful centerpieces for memories our clients will forever have in their hearts.

The overwhelming support of the community has been absolutely amazing and we would never have thought that we would grow in so many leaps and bounds in only a few months. Every new quotation accepted was seen as a new challenge to improve our abilities and to produce wonderful things to our clients.

We would like to thank everyone who has supported us throughout 2014 and our wish for 2015 is to make it even better, bigger and definitely sweeter!

A one-stop shop for children's parties

Gayle Davies-Webb

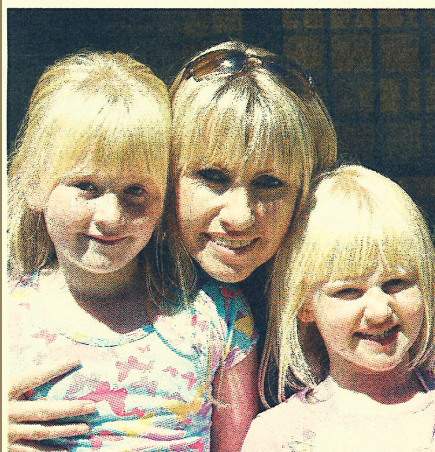

Nadine Thompson identified a gap in the local market for a "one-stop offering" for parents arranging parties for kids. Her new company, the Party Packet, was launched this weekend, to the delight of a group of super-excited children who got to ice cupcakes and sample them.

Instead of running around town, it takes only one phone call to Nadine to have your whole party catered for and entertainment organised. Cupcake decorating, party packs and candy buffets are just some of the items Nadine will organise. She'll also assist with the invitations.

She wants to offer something different from the run-of-the-mill party stuff and sources imported sweets from Spain. If you're worried about a sugar overload, Nadine can provide healthier alternatives that will still appeal to kids. Costume dress-up, kiddies' aprons and cooking/icing classes are part of the service she plans to deliver.
